REUTERS/Pablo Martinez Monsivais A woman lights a candle in solidarity with the new electronic executive to call for life imprisonment for those who commit murder or other forms of violence against women during a vigil at the Legislative Palace in Havana, Cuba, October 10, 2016. The death of a woman in Cienfuegos, Cuba, who was strangled by a man just hours after she reported him for violent behavior, is the latest in a spate of recent cases in which women reported being victims of violence, and it's sparking outrage across the island. The victim, Joselyn Pernell Martinez, 29, was reported in the early morning hours on Friday to the local police department for reporting her partner for violently pushing and slapping her. According to local press reports, officers found Joselyn Martinez with "visible signs of aggression" and, despite objections from the woman's partner, placed him under arrest. The victim's boyfriend was booked into the city's Criminal Affairs Department and taken to a local police station, where, around 6 a.m., according to a report from Cuba's Mambo Noticias news site, Joselyn Martinez was assaulted and strangled by a fellow inmate. She died around 9 a.m. on Saturday morning. The prosecutor's office in charge of the case said that on the day before the reported incident, Martinez had been to the emergency room after suffering a fall that caused "damage to the inside and surface of her left arm." In spite of the injuries, she refused to go to the hospital again for evaluation. The prosecutor told Mambo that the Castro government has instituted new measures to monitor the security of female workers in Havana, whom it has said are especially vulnerable to being victims of harassment. Of the new measures, the prosecutor said, "Women... may report harassment... to the police or the Institute of Human Rights.... The police will investigate the case within 24 hours and decide what action needs to be taken." A lawyer for the woman's family told Mambo that Joselyn Martinez had sought an emergency divorce from her partner, saying that his "violent and threatening" behavior caused her mental and physical trauma. She added that her family is concerned that a recent spike in reported cases of partner violence in Cuba could be related to Havana's recent move to more aggressively enforce its anti-violence
