The accident happened about 3:30 p.m. Tuesday, according to San Francisco police spokesman Officer Carlos Manfredi. The float, which was owned by the San Francisco Giants, was struck by a westbound Honda Civic. The driver, 50, a tourist from the Czech Republic, was transported to the hospital for unspecified injuries, said police spokesman Officer Robert Rueca. Q: How do I get the mysql row length / buffer using PHP? I know that if I want to know how much buffer space is required for a particular query, I use mysql_query's result_metadata function. But is there a mysql_* function that would let me know how much buffer space is required per row? I can't seem to find one in the documentation, so I assume it's not possible. From what I understand, getting the size of the MySQL result without a SELECT * would be impossible (I'm not sure if I'm wrong there, but it seems that I am). A: From memory, when using LOAD DATA one gets the amount of data currently in the given MySQL variable by looking at the length of the result. --- 3da54e8ca3
