The fact that the United States and Canada account for that biomass also means that less than half of the world's anglers are fishing in North America. Which leads me to my second point: In a world of 7 billion people, there are still 1.5 billion people who have not yet had access to fishing, and less than half of that number are in North America. What does that mean for a sport that claims to have 500 million anglers? It means that our sport has a lot of work to do in promoting our sport overseas. The third point that I'd like to make is that we, in the United States and Canada, have very high levels of fishing participation. While I acknowledge the existence of the "consumption" of fishing as it applies to Western cultures, I think it's important to recognize that the mass media is largely a part of our culture. It's not just that we watch TV shows, we also read articles, we listen to the radio, we attend sporting events, we surf the internet and we go to the movies. These media outlets draw our attention to the things they want us to see, and because of that, they influence what we see, think, and believe. When it comes to angling, I think we need to take that influence into consideration. I think the last point I a1d647c40b
