A: I would suggest using BeautifulSoup to parse your source. from bs4 import BeautifulSoup with open('document.html') as fp: soup = BeautifulSoup(fp, "html.parser") for item in soup.findAll('a'): print(item.get('href')) Q: Check value in xml with python I have written a python script, where I can run the program once a person has entered in a value. When I want to run the program again, the same input is required. I need to check if the input is the same as in the previous run and I know how to check if the input is the same as in the previous run (by comparing the name, but is there a way to check if it's the same as the previous run without naming it? My xml file looks like this and my script looks like this

import xml.etree.ElementTree as ET
class variables:
    def __init__(self):
        self.__tree = ET.parse('variables.xml')
    def read(self):
        for tag in self.__tree.getroot().findall('value'):
            name = tag.attrib['name']
            value = tag.attrib['value']
            print(name + " + " + value)
    def ask(self):
        while True:
            try:
                1cdb36666d
```
