>1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a data recording and playback apparatus, a data recording and playback method, and a data recording and playback program, more specifically to a data recording and playback apparatus, a data recording and playback method, and a data recording and playback program which are preferably for use in a camera, for example. 2. Description of the Related Art The prevalence of a digital still camera has increased recently, along with the expansion of applications such as an electronic still-video camera, a monitoring camera, or a mobile phone. Common applications of the digital still camera include a printout of an image. In some of the applications that use the digital still camera, a playback image for viewing and edition is also recorded as an image file. The image captured by the digital still camera is saved in a conventional file system such as a Windows directory or a UNIX directory. However, in the case of an electronic still-video camera or a mobile phone that uses the file system, the file system is also used to store not only images, but also moving-image files such as moving video files. This makes it difficult to store moving-image files because the file system is not suitable for that purpose. For example, the digital still camera handles a moving-image file and a still image as a single piece of data. Thus, when the user wants to save the moving image during a recording operation, it is necessary for the user to perform a file transfer from the moving-image file temporarily to some other medium such as a hard disk. On the other hand, the electronic still-video camera or mobile phone stores still images and moving-image files separately. When the user wants to view stored moving-image files, it is necessary to select a moving-image file and play it back. Thus, no moving-image file can be previously selected and played back for recording. Further, since a digital still camera, an electronic still camera, or mobile phone
