What's New in the?

Parallels Access has been in the works for some time now, and is now finally ready for public release. This is great news, because this app is truly one of the best iPhone and iPad apps you can install on your device. Parallels Access is a remote access software that allows you to remotely control and access a computer, from a mobile device or from another computer. What makes this app even better is the fact that this software is free, so there's no excuse to not install it on your iPhone or iPad. Parallels Access is compatible with all Intel-based Macs, Windows PCs, iPhones and iPads. Once installed, you have the ability to connect your target system over Wi-Fi or 3G/LTE in less than 3 minutes. While connected, you can control all your applications, play music and movies, view your device's screen, copy and move files, and more. You have two different ways of controlling your computers: desktop agent and cloud console. Both have their advantages and disadvantages, so I will explain them later. Parallels Access runs in the background, so you can keep using your other apps without the interface taking up your attention. Once you disconnect, you have the ability to perform an immediate reboot of the remote system, should you need to. Unfortunately, Parallels Access is in beta at the moment, and it is not yet compatible with Macs. It is not advisable to install it on your devices with Macs, as the app isn't yet designed to work with Macs. However, an update is on the way, which will enable you to control your Macs with Parallels Access as well. Parallels Access Features: Parallels Access is designed to be intuitive and easy to use. The application looks very similar to what you'd find in the Finder on your Mac or iTunes on your iOS device. Once you connect to a remote computer, an icon in the status bar will indicate the status of your connection. You can use this to change the connection status to 'out of service' or 'connecting' in case you need to disconnect. Once connected, you will be asked to enter your password, and all the applications installed on your target system will be displayed in a dedicated application window. You can then play music, view photos, play videos, or whatever else you want to do. While connected, you can also control the applications running on your remote computer, such as drag and
