etex calculates the roofing slope and angle for all six roof types in one pass. this means your roof is properly dimensioned. it also means the roofing layout has a much greater degree of ease and accuracy because you don't have to work and re-work the layout every time you change the roofing material. to calculate the roofing pitch/slope, click on the **roofing cut out** file on the left. this will open two drawing windows. one will show the roof and the other the rafters and roofing profile. the roof line will be on the bottom drawing window and the rafter line on the top drawing window. the roof profile will be clipped to the rafter lines. all this is done on the first drawing window. it's very important that this window and window order is clearly defined in the layout in order for the calculation to be accurate. the dimensions of the roof and any material used will be highlighted on both windows. once all this is done, go to the **roofing cut out** file in the eps/pdf folder of the download. you will be prompted for the dimensions of your roof. these are defined in the 2d drawings. once you have entered the dimensions, a new roofing cut out is created. now go to this new cut out and you will notice that the roof line is highlighted, as well as the dimensions and the material used. you should have the following visual: there are all sorts of new and interesting things you can do with it like: playing midi notes by either typing the note name (0-127) or by using the virtual keyboards (keys 1-128). playing drum beats with snare, kick, and additional mics. playing drum beats with more than one beat. changing the velocity with the pen. record stuff with the record function.
